Three year old grandson was excited to visit grandma's house, was running around barefoot on the deck. It was still March in Maine so that was still snow in the yard. When I had a snowball hit me, I realized he was going barefoot into the snow. "Aren't your feet cold?" "Oh, no. I have imagination!" He said. Dave Carrington

I was showing my granddaughter where we used to go fishing in Lake Ontario, when my great grandson Carson, took my reading glasses, looked at the map and said : "Wow, I can see the fish in the water!" Annie Nightengale, New Sharon

KHS tables to be replete with Victorian Tea and Treats

AUGUSTA - In this year of America's quarter-millennium celebration, it's worth noting that not all New England tea traditions involve pouring tea into Boston Harbor as a protest against the British king.

At the Kennebec Historical Society, for example, it's poured into teacups in December during the society's annual Victorian tea. The event provides an opportunity to socialize and reflect on the many instructive and productive activities of the year that's drawing to a close.

This year's party is scheduled for 2 to 4 p.m. Sunday, December 6, at KHS headquarters, the Henry Weld Fuller Jr. House, which is at 107 Winthrop Street in Augusta and will be decorated for the occasion. KHS member Marie Tesch has volunteered once again to provide musical entertainment on the piano. Members and the public are invited to celebrate the holiday season at this event. A variety of goodies will be available to sample, including cookies, other snacks, coffee, and tea.

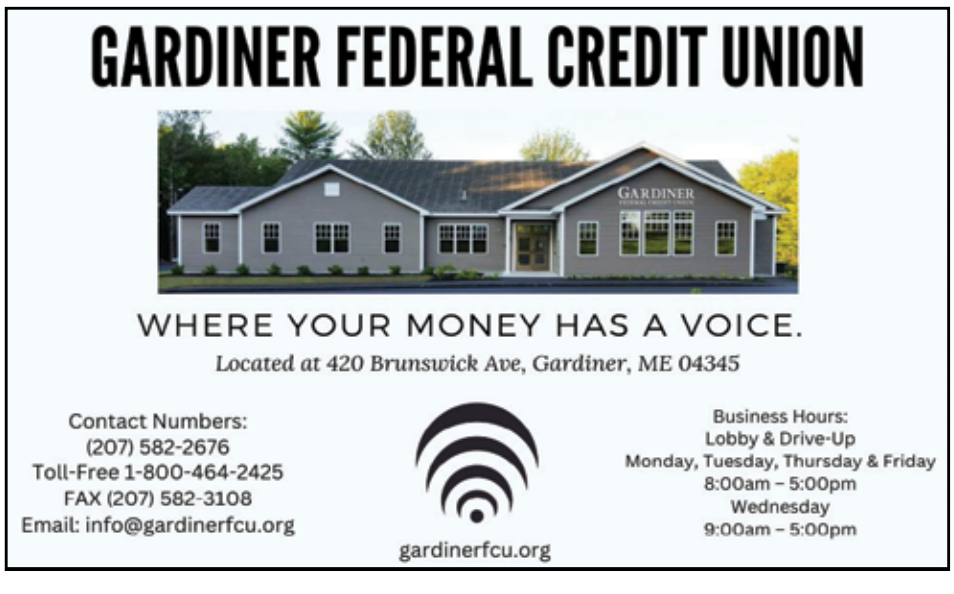

Anyone interested in decorating, serving, or bringing some tasty treats is asked to contact Joanne De Campos by phone at (207) 622-2118 or by email at khsjoanne@gmail.com.

The late Joyce Fessenden (1931-2017), of Winthrop, plays holiday music while member Emily Schroeder – now the society's archivist – sings along at a Victorian tea held December 13, 2009, at the Kennebec Historical Society's headquarters in Augusta. This year's tea is scheduled for December 6.

AARP Maine Community Outreach volunteer

Joyce Bucciantini

By November, the last bit of Autumn warmth is mostly behind us. Sure, there are still a few brisk fall days for outdoor fun or the last bit of yard work, but the stacks of wood pellets in front of hardware stores and fuel trucks delivering home heating oil are a solid reminder that winter will soon be here; along with the heating bills.

Home heating oil use in Maine has declined over the last 15 years. Currently, about 50% of Maine households depend upon fuel oil as the primary source of heat, and the increasing cost of home heating oil is a major concern for many families. The Maine Department of Energy Resources' (maine.gov/energy/home) most recent survey of home heating fuel prices reported that the statewide average price for heating oil was $6.02 per gallon, representing an 81 percent increase from last fall. Homeowners can expect to pay about $740 more to fill up a standard 275-gallon oil tank than they did a year ago. These price increases will certainly impact household budgets for Mainers of all ages.

Maine Housing helped over 45,000 households stay warm last winter through the Home Energy Assistance Program (HEAP) or LIHEAP and the Energy Crisis Intervention Program (ECIP). HEAP helps qualified homeowners and renters pay for heating costs, and ECIP helps eligible Mainers who are at risk of losing their heating source. Both programs are administered through Maine Housing and nine local Community Action Agencies. Maine Housing's website has information about the energy conservation and heating assistance programs to help Mainers stay warm this winter. Applications are online as well at mainehousing.org.

Home heating bills are not the only utility expense that increases over the winter. Electric bills and other utility bills may cost more as well. The Maine Public Utility Commission (PUC) lists several resources to help families who are struggling to pay their bills (maine.gov/mpuc/consumer-assistance/programs). The website has practical first steps to help families contact their utility companies to discuss possible payment options or other assistance that might be available.

There is no doubt that Mainers are resourceful. We already turn the thermostat down and put on an extra sweater to save on energy bills. Before we need to reach for a third sweater, it is a good idea to make a plan for the upcoming heating bills. The Maine Housing and the PUC websites have useful resources to help us be prepared when winter arrives.

As always, please check out our upcoming events and programs and be sure to bring a friend. I hope to see you soon!

Mercury

Q. Can you get cancer from eating fish that contains mercury?

There is no strong evidence that mercury causes cancer in humans. The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry (ATSDR), and the World Health Organization's International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) do not classify environmental mercury as a known or probable human carcinogen.

Primary health concerns surrounding mercury center on its neurological and kidney toxicity, rather than cancer risk.

Mercury, a liquid metal also known as quicksilver, combines with carbon to make organic mercury compounds; methylmercury is the most common one. Methylmercury is made primarily by microscopic organisms in water and soil.

Methylmercury builds up in the tissues of fish. Larger and older fish tend to have the highest levels of mercury. Research shows that most people's fish consumption does not cause health concerns.

Almost all fish—and shellfish—contain traces of mercury. However, some fish have higher levels of mercury that can harm the developing nervous system of a fetus or young child. The risks from mercury in seafood depend on the amount and type that is consumed.

The EPA and the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) give the following advice to those at highest risk such as pregnant women:

• Do not eat shark, swordfish, king mackerel or tilefish. These have high levels of mercury.

• Eat shrimp, canned light tuna, salmon, pollock, and catfish. These are low in mercury.

Albacore, or white meat tuna, has more mercury than canned light tuna.

• Contact your local health department to check local advisories about the safety of fish caught in nearby waters.

(An important added note: fish sticks and fast-food fish sandwiches are usually made from seafood low in mercury.)

Mercury is a naturally occurring element that is found in air, water and soil. In addition, mercury enters the air from mining ore, burning coal and waste, and from manufacturing plants. It enters the water or soil from natural deposits, disposal of waste, and volcanic activity.

Exposure to mercury occurs from breathing contaminated air, ingesting contaminated water and food, and having dental and medical treatments.

Pure mercury has been used to make thermometers, switches, pressure gauges, fluorescent bulbs, button batteries, thermostats, dental fillings and medicines.

In recent years, there has been a growing focus on the need to decrease the use of mercury in products and to prevent mercury in existing products from entering the waste stream. Several states have passed legislation to reduce mercury in waste.

So how about those fillings in your mouth?

Dental amalgam is a silver-colored material used to restore teeth that have cavities. Dental amalgam is made of liquid mercury and a powder containing silver, tin, copper, zinc and other metals. Mercury concentration in dental amalgam is generally about 50 percent by weight.

Is dental amalgam safe?

For the vast majority of people, dental amalgam is not considered a health threat by major regulatory bodies, including the FDA and the American Dental Association (ADA).

Small Business, Big Ambitions:
The Story Behind Seacoast Junk & Demo

Behind every small business is a story, and for Seacoast Junk & Demo, that story begins with a young entrepreneur, a strong work ethic, and a passion for giving back to the community he calls home. community he calls home.

Meet Zachary Poland, better known to his customers as simply "Zach." Born and raised in Lincoln County, Zach graduated from Lincoln Academy in 2023 before attending Central Maine Community College to study carpentry. After gaining hands-on experience working alongside professional carpenters, he decided it was time to branch out and build something of his own.

Zach initially explored several business ventures, offering a variety of services before noticing one consistent demand: junk removal and demolition. Recognizing an opportunity, he decided to specialize in those services, and Seacoast Junk & Demo was born.

Nearly two years later, the business has been going full speed ahead. But for Zach, running a successful company means more than simply getting the job done. It's also a successful company means more than simply getting the job done. It's also about supporting the community that has supported him. While working on job sites, Zach makes an effort to identify items that can be donated rather than discarded. Whether it's household goods for local families or supplies for animal shelters, he works to give usable items a second life. He also connects with organizations like Habitat for Humanity and helps customers find ways to donate unwanted belongings.

His dedication to the community doesn't stop there. Outside of running his business, Zach volunteers as a firefighter, giving his time to help protect his neighbors. At the end of the day, Zach is a small-town Mainer with big ambitions, proving that small businesses can make a big difference..

"Great removal company! Zach is professional, thorough and so nice. Nothing was too much effort for him to do. I highly recommend Seacoast Junk & Demo. I will definitely call them again." - Deborah

"Wonderful service, professional, incredibly kind and helpful. Can't recommend Zachary enough. He will help without hesitation, is timely, and has an excellent business ethic. The customer is always his priority, and it shows. Plus, as a member of the local fire department, he's got random emergencies and clutzy customers covered just in case! This is your guy if you've got stuff to move out." - Sarah

"Was able to fit me in less than 48hrs after I called. Incredibly kind and professional. Thanks again for helping me get a fresh start!!!" - Clair

Notable Thanksgiving traditions

Metro

Thanksgiving is a family-centric holiday that revolves around the dinner table and encourages celebrants to acknowledge all that they have to be thankful for. Thanksgiving is celebrated in October in Canada and in November in the United States.

Many Thanksgiving traditions focus on community events and sumptuous feasts, but they don't stop there. Here are some of the more notable traditions people can embrace on this day of giving thanks.

• Roasting turkey: Many foods will grace the Thanksgiving dinner table, but turkey is the star of the show. Roasting remains the most popular way to cook a turkey, but deep-fried and even rotisserie turkey have become more popular in recent years.

Metro photo

• Watching the parade: Millions of people tune into the broadcast of Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade, and many more line the streets of New York City to watch it in person. The Macy's parade was first held on November 27, 1924, and was only suspended for three years during World War II. The parade features musical events, special guests and pop culture balloons that navigate streets lined with skyscrapers.

• Turkey trotting: Believe it or not, wild turkeys can run at speeds up to 25 miles per hour in short bursts, according to Lake Erie Nature & Science Center. Perhaps inspired by these speedy birds, turkey trots are popular on Thanksgiving Day. People of all ages start the holiday by running or walking in these charity events.

• Watching football: Watching professional football on television is a popular Thanksgiving custom. The Detroit Lions and the Dallas Cowboys always host an afternoon game on Thanksgiving. Each year, the National Football League also schedules a third matchup in primetime featuring other teams. In 2026, the lineup features: Chicago Bears at Detroit Lions (1:00 p.m. ET), Philadelphia Eagles at Dallas Cowboys (4:00 p.m. ET) and Kansas City Chiefs at Buffalo Bills (8:20 p.m. ET).

• Early holiday decorating: Many households will decorate for Christmas immediately following the clearing of the Thanksgiving turkey from the table. Some may even decorate before guests arrive on Thanksgiving.

• Tuning into "A Charlie Brown Thanksgiving": Some families watch this beloved Charlie Brown television special the night before Thanksgiving, enjoying the movie's snack menu of jelly beans, popcorn and toast.

• Celebrate "Friendsgiving": People who may not have relatives close by often gather with close friends to commemorate friendships and express their gratitude for one another.

Thanksgiving marks the first holiday during the whirlwind celebratory season. It's filled with many traditions that people across the United States and Canada enjoy.

Health & Wellness

We all need it – STRETCH!

Yesterday, right in the middle of my workday, I received a phone call from my sister in Florida.

"What are you doing?" She asked.

"I'm doing my cats and cows," I replied.

"What?" She said, sounding a little confused.

"Yoga stretches!" I explained.

"I thought you were working!"

"I am! But my coworker inspired me to start stretching throughout the day. Her physical therapist recommended doing the Cat and Cow poses every hour to help with her back problems. So, I'm supporting her while being proactive about my own health. You know how much I sit during the day!"

My sister laughed and said, "I didn't think you needed any inspiration to do all that wacky stuff!"

Well, she does have a point! But seriously, why shouldn't we all take a few minutes throughout the day to stretch? Whether you're sitting at a desk, working on your feet, driving, cooking, or running around taking care of everyone else, your body deserves a little attention.

I told her, "It's a great idea to get away from your desk or whatever you're doing and stretch every hour. It only takes a couple of minutes, and it's good for all of us. You should try it! You don't have to do anything fancy. Just find a few gentle stretches that feel good."

Like so many women, my sister spends much of her day taking care of others. She's constantly lifting, tugging, pulling, carrying, and doing things for the people around her. Sound familiar?

We can be so busy looking after everyone else that we forget about the one person who needs our attention the most: OURSELVES!

And then came an interesting part of our conversation.

My sister began telling me about a recent trip to the emergency room. Her hips had locked up so badly that she could barely walk! The doctor gave her a cortisone shot and explained that she was extremely tight and needed to work on her mobility and stretching. He also referred her to a physical therapist.

Well, isn't that ironic?

Here I was, encouraging her to stretch, and her body had already sent her a pretty loud message that it was time to pay attention!

"How wonderful!" I told her. "To all you physical therapists out there, I LOVE YOU! And massage therapists, the same goes for you!"

Seriously, these professionals play such an important role in helping people maintain mobility, recover from physical problems, and learn how to take better care of their bodies.

Exercise, stretching, and massage therapy can all be valuable parts of a proactive approach to muscle health and mobility. We shouldn't wait until something hurts or stops working properly before we start paying attention.

Think about it. We sit too much. We stand too much. We bend, lift, twist, carry, reach, and repeat the same movements day after day. Our muscles get tight, our joints get stiff, and sometimes our bodies simply tell us they've had enough!

Why wait until we're in pain to do something about it?

I was so happy to hear that my sister would be seeing a physical therapist. I know she'll benefit from learning the right movements and stretches for her body. I also encouraged her to ask about gentle movements she could incorporate into her day, such as Cat and Cow and Child's Pose, one of my personal favorites.

You don't have to be a yoga expert, join a gym, or spend an hour exercising to start taking better care of yourself. Sometimes all it takes is getting up, moving around, taking a few deep breaths, and giving your muscles a little attention.

Here's my challenge to you: STRETCH!

Set a reminder on your phone if you have to. Get away from your computer. Step away from whatever you're doing. Give yourself five minutes every hour to move and stretch gently.

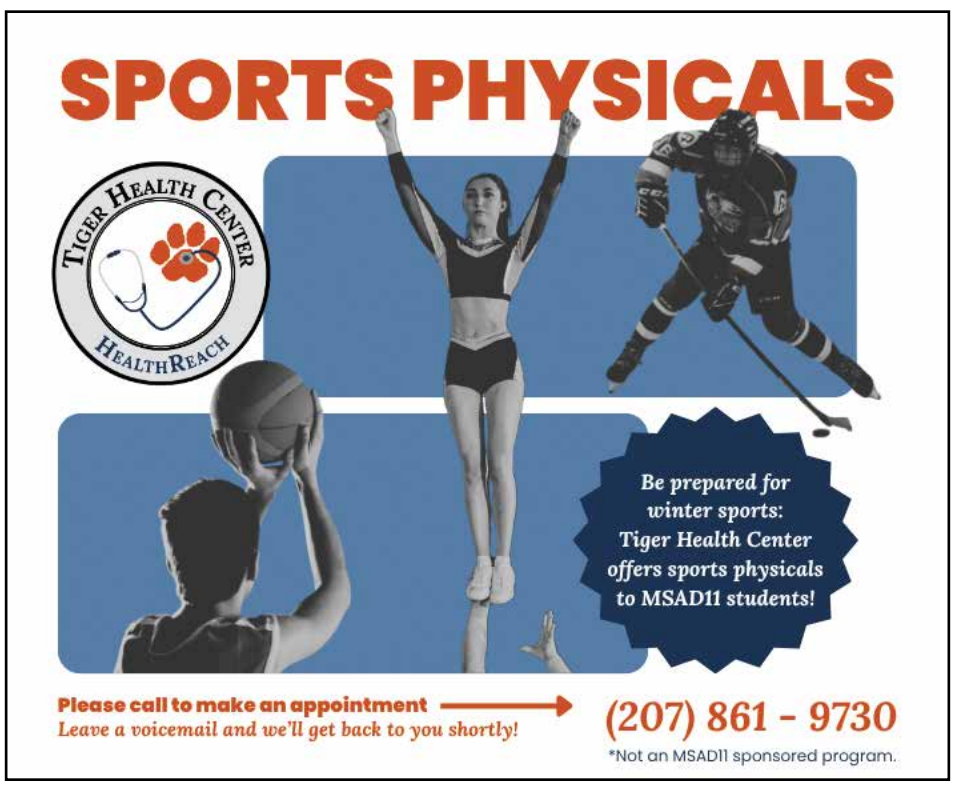

And remember, if you have pain, injury, or limited mobility, get professional guidance about which movements are right for you.

We are often so busy taking care of everyone and everything else that we forget to take care of ourselves. But our bodies carry us through every single day. Don't they deserve a little love in return?

So, let's stop putting ourselves at the bottom of the priority list. Be proactive. Keep moving. Keep stretching. Your body will thank you!

Live Long. Live Well.

MOVIE REVIEW by Lucas Allen

You Can See Everything

(A24)

A lot has been written and talked about the notorious health pioneer Elizabeth Holmes, who managed to defraud investors in bringing her dream company Theranos to life, only to be convicted and sentenced to prison. The widely acclaimed Hulu limited series "The Dropout," starring Emmy and Golden Globe winner Amanda Seyfried as Holmes, may have been enough, but perhaps there's more to her than what the media portrays. The new documentary "You Can See Everything" from acclaimed filmmakers Nathan Fielder ("Nathan for You") and Lance Oppenheim (this year's terrific "Primetime") takes the viewer on a mind-bending journey through the lens of both filmmaker and subject.

With 34 days until her prison sentence, Holmes invited Fielder to document her private life with her partner, hotel heir Billy Evans, and their two young children. The documentary's birds-eye view helps reveal the couple dealing with the fallout of her 2018 trial and indictment not just with the Hulu miniseries, but with the way the media tends to portray her as a pathological liar and manipulative. At the same time, they reveal early plans to resurrect Theranos and perfect her original vision once more. Doubtful, Fielder tries to understand her ambitions through both Billy and her supportive parents.

After the beginning of her prison sentence, Billy is left in charge of running Theranos and immediately comes off as controlling, including taking over the making of the documentary. It is especially alarming when Fielder finds out that Evans is using her image to promote the newly rebranded company and create an AI double of her, along with using her social media accounts. However, the filmmaker has a few tricks up his sleeve to save his project.

With a nearly three-hour documentary, the pacing can be slow at times, though it is more of a stylistic choice by the filmmakers. Its pace is there to make the viewer feel right at home in the lives of these subjects and, at the same time, let them process each moment to understand the events that follow. In fact, getting used to slow pacing helps to surprise the viewer when the film's second half drops the shoe.

Fielder certainly has a close eye on his subject, especially when he involves himself heavily in their lives. Throughout the feature, he can peel back the layers on their personalities to the point where there is something hidden beneath them that is eye-opening and terrifying. There is a scene where he shows Holmes and Evans a clip of the classic Abbott & Costello routine "Who's on First" as a way to show how such hilariously confusing miscommunication pretty much mirrors how they are trying to bring their new ambition to the table. It also turns this documentary into a subversive and incendiary indictment on how the blurred line between fact and fiction can be misconstrued to get to the truth.

The first half of the film centers squarely on Holmes herself basically a loving mother and a smart businesswoman, but there is still an air of mistrust about her that is just as fascinating. After she goes to prison, the second half deals with Billy's growing control and paranoia as a business owner, leading to some uneasy moments for Fielder to confront. When you put these two halves into perspective, it leaves you with questions about each of their sanity and how they really function as a couple.

At first, Seyfried appears mainly to help reenact Fielder's conversations with Holmes alongside actor Christopher Abbott as Billy, coming off as unnecessary padding. But her involvement becomes clearer as the second half rolls along, as a way for anyone who has seen "The Dropout" to rethink when fact and fiction overlap. Not to mention, watching the actress be herself and take on her Holmes role a little differently could be something award-worthy in its own way.

Without hyperbole, "You Can See Everything" certainly lives up to the hype for being a pop culture explosion while also carving out its own space in the documentary genre. It will provoke different reactions from audiences everywhere about the nature of subjectivity versus exposing the real truths. In the end, it is an unforgettable experience from beginning to end that absolutely surprises at every turn.

Give Robocalls the Busy Signal

Robocalls can be more than just annoying. While some automated calls are legitimate, others are used by criminals to steal money or personal information. These calls may promise prizes, demand payment for debts you don't owe or claim to come from a trusted organization.

Scammers can manipulate caller ID to make a call appear to come from a local number or a legitimate business. They may also use stolen personal information and artificial intelligence to make their calls more convincing. Even if a number looks familiar, that doesn't mean the caller can be trusted.

To protect yourself, avoid answering calls from unknown numbers. If you answer a suspicious robocall, hang up without pressing any buttons. Check with your phone provider about call-blocking options and consider adding your number to DoNotCall.gov. While this can reduce unwanted telemarketing calls, it won't stop scammers who ignore the rules.

The Great Rut Debate

During the Hunter's Moon and the rut is when that trophy buck is distracted and not as vigilant as normal.

Many sportsmen count the November deer hunt as the highlight of all of their outdoor passions. It is a special time. Frosty mornings and quiet moments in a tree stand with hand warmers, a thermos of hot coffee mixed with the anticipation of a big buck in the cross hairs is a deer hunter's daydream. Or, for the hardiest and most driven among the hunt fraternity, the dream is to follow a big, dew-clawed track on fresh snow.

And, of course, the Maine deer camp is also the centerpiece of the hunt, part of the heritage and the history. These camps come in all sizes and description and locales; many of them passed along from generation to generation, along with unique histories and huntin' yarns that get carried on year after year.

A mouse in the corner – a graying one that has been hiding in the food bin for more than a year or two – knows that many of the same old topics get worked over at the card tables year after year. Among them: the best deer gun, the time of day that bucks move, tracking methods, and the Daddy of them all, when is the peak period of the all-important rut?

In general, if you can figure out what time of the month the rut is at its peak, you stand the best chance of catching a buck when he is distracted with his guard down and his focus is not on danger. Since there is only educated guesswork about rut times, mixed with some well-grounded anecdotal evidence, the deer rut can be the subject of spirited debate at deer camp.

There are two clear schools of thought on this subject. The conventional wisdom of highly respected wildlife biologists like Gerry Lavigne is straightforward and has nothing to do with the moon phases. Lavigne will tell you, unequivocally, that the rut always peaks on November 15th year after year, period. This theory holds that the breeding season is guided or dependent upon the length of daylight.

The more romantic theory, if you will, is that the rut, although occurring over a period of 40 days, has a "sweet spot" that lasts about 10 days. This is the lunar theory as articulated by well-known deer researcher Charles Alsheimer from Bath, New York. In a chapter in his book titled "Anatomy of the Rut," Alsheimer postulates that the whitetail rut is regulated by the lunar cycle.

He theorizes that the Rutting Moon, or the Beaver Moon, determines the sweet spot, which begins three days after the Rutting Moon and lasts, as said earlier, about 10 days. Unlike the Lavigne rutting theory, this lunar theory dictates a different rut peak year after year and takes a little calculation on the hunter's part. For example, the Rutting Moon is always the second full moon after the autumnal equinox. This fall, however, the Rutting Moon, or Beaver Moon, falls on November 24th. So this would commence the rutting "sweet spot" on November 27th, much later than last year. This would also dictate that the best hunt dates would be about November 23th thru November 30th. Be advised that the firearms season ends on Saturday November 28th followed by the commencing of the blackpowder season on November 30th. So smokepolers take note!

So what does this mean? It really depends upon which theory you elect to go with, lunar cycle or length of day. If you opt for the lunar theory and really want to maximize your odds for catching a rutting buck in deep distraction, you might want to reconsider the date you have set for your hunt week vacation. If Alsheimer is right, the buck of your dreams is more likely to make a mistake in your favor during the last week of the hunt.

One other thing. If you really want to "play the numbers," and cover all bases, lunar theory AND length-of-day theory, and you have a tree stand in good deer country, be in that stand every day during the aforementioned dates.

Good luck, and hunt safely!

Reader Recipe

Offer something new at Thanksgiving Dinner this year:

Thanksgiving dinner offers a lot to look forward to. The unofficial kickoff to the holiday season, Thanksgiving is a chance for families and friends to get together, watch some football and, of course, share a delicious meal.

Food is a focal point on Thanksgiving. Turkey is the traditional centerpiece, but side dishes garner their share of the glory, too. Stuffing, mashed potatoes, vegetable casseroles, and more have a way of finding their ways onto the Thanksgiving menu. But hosts looking to offer something a little less traditional and more unique can look to this delicious recipe for "Stuffed Zucchini" from Lines+Angles.

Stuffed Zucchini

Makes 6 servings

- 6 medium zucchini, washed and ends trimmed
- 3 cups butter cracker crumbs, crumbled
- 1/2 cup grated Parmesan cheese, plus extra to sprinkle
- 1 small onion, peeled and minced
- 3 tablespoons minced fresh parsley, plus extra for garnish
- Freshly ground black pepper, to taste
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 2 eggs, beaten
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 15 ounces canned diced tomatoes, drained well

1. Preheat oven to 350 F.
2. Cut zucchini in half lengthwise; scoop pulp out with a spoon. Place zucchini shells in a large baking pan.
3. In a large bowl, combine zucchini pulp, cracker crumbs, cheese, onion, parsley, salt, pepper, and the beaten eggs. Fill zucchini shells with mixture; dot with butter and spoon tomatoes over the filling. Sprinkle with additional Parmesan cheese and bake for 30 to 35 minutes. Garnish with chopped parsley and serve.

November is Lung Cancer Awareness Month

Get Screened

Lung cancer remains the leading cause of cancer death among men and women in the U.S.

But there's a quick, painless tool to detect lung cancer early, when it's most treatable: Low-Dose CT scan (LDCT).

Talk to your doctor if you:

- Are 50 – 80 years old;
- Have a 20 pack-year smoking history; and
- Currently smoke or have quit smoking within the past 15 years.

State of the Art Diagnostics for Lung Cancer Detection

MaineGeneral was the first health system in the state to offer robotic bronchoscopy: the latest technology to detect lung cancer in patients at earlier, more treatable stages. More robotic bronchoscopies are done at MaineGeneral than any other hospital in Maine.

Combined with Low-Dose CT scan, robotic bronchoscopy is a powerful tool to detect lung cancer early.
